In one notable passage, the French President said that it was clear from the absence of the word "Europe" from President Ford's address to Congress and the nation on Aug. 12 that Europe had to "count on itself to organize itself."

In his speech, Mr. Ford pledged "continuity in the loyal col-laboration on our many mutual endeavors" with Japan and "the Atlantic community," his closest

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's proposals for new European political. economic and monetary measures came as a surprise during the 20minute address to this nation still on vacation. It was expected that he would save foreign policy announcements for his press conference next month.

Instead, he made it clear that he planned changes not only in domestic policy, but in foreign policy as well.

Arms Deal of Century' Ripe As NATO Renews Air Forces

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, Aug. 27 (IHT).-The stakes in the "arms deal of the century," as it is called here, are more than the billions of dollars in aircraft contracts alone. At stake, in the eyes of many Europeans, is the survival of a European aircraft industry.

Many Americans, and others at the SHAPE and NATO commands in Belgium, look rather to the importance of standardization of aircraft among NATO members, and to that end believe an American plane is the best buy.

For the last several weeks, French officials and aircraft-industry spokesmen have been leaking details of the negotiations under way to replace 350 aging F-104 Starfighter jets in the Dutch, Belgian, Danish and Norwegian Air Forces. These contracts are expected to be worth at least $2 billion over the next few years and represent the first sales in what is expected to be an eventual 3.500-plane market worth some $30 billion in coming years. The principal antagonists in this sales contest are the French company, Dassault-Breguet, and two American firms, Northrop and General Dynamics. For Prance, Dassault and the Mirage it would be a tremendous coup to fill these contracts. Money aside, it would give the French industry a more "European" aspect and make France a prime supplier for NATO, an organization of which Prance is an uncertain member.

It is certain that some European countries believe France can be made into a surer member of the alliance through increased European arms cooperation and production

Last May, the four buyer countries set up a steering committee in hopes of reaching a common decision. Apart from the Mirage F-1 M-53, two other European planes were given consideration, the Anglo-French Jaguar and the Viggan, made by Saab of Sweden. Two American planes were in the running, General Dynamics YF-16 and Northrop's YP-17 Cobra. The real choice, according to experts was between the French and Americans, though the British were firmly pushing the Jaguar. If the French could argue that

Europeans should choose a European fighter, the Americans' political reasoning was no less compelling. Washington argued that this was not only a chance for greater standardization of planes, important for military reasons, but that through the purchase of U.S. planes the Euro-living in a crescent-shaped region going from Turkey through Iraq to Iran in an independent Kurdistan. For among other reasons, because much of its petroleum resources lies in areas claimed by the Kurds, the Iraqi government has strongly resisted this goal, saying that it is willing to give the Kurds only limited autonomy within the Iraqi nation. The ruling Ba'ath party's newspaper in Baghdad. Al Thawra,

'Auto Plant Aide Shot in Argentina

CORDOBA, Argentina, Aug. 27 (AP).-The labor relations manager of the French-owned auto company ika-Renault was killed today, and the firm's two plants here were shut down.

Ricardo Boya, 55, was gunned dorn when his car was blocked by several vehicles on his way to work, police said. Three companions, believed to be bodyguards, were not injured.

Ika-Renault, a subsidiary of Renault of France, and the Cordoba local of the auto workers union have been locked in a pay dispute for four months. Local leftist leaders of the union have clashed with right-wing national union leaders over the pay dispeans would be offset in some of the cost of U.S. forces in Europe. It was pointed out that Congress might find it hard to maintain these force levels without significant Atlantic alliance arms cooperation.

Heavy Pressure

The pressures on the four governments were intense, French Americans and British promised favorable credit arrangements. and all promised that the planes would be assembled in the home countries, assuring national labor They all vaunted the merits of their planes, the French asserting that the Mirage would last well into the 1980s, when Dassault's ACF 'avion de combat futur' will be ready. The British held out possibilities for future participation in the Anglo-West German-Italian MRCA fighter project, the plane that will rival Dassault's

Both the VF-16 and VR-17 American planes are prototypes, based on the new concept of a "lightweight" fighter, one that is supposed to be technically superior the older, heavier planes, and cheaper, reversing the trend to big, $10-million-to-15-million planes like the MRCA. They will be in the $5-$6 million class, as is the Mirage F-1. They are at present engaged in competition at Edwards Air Force Base. The U.S. Air Force is expected to order 600 planes from the winner.

The French say the U.S. planes are untested, unproven and unsuited to European duty. The Americans say that the Mirage is obsolescent, and that even the French Air Force has not bought the F-1 M-53 model that France is trying to sell. This latter point. embarrassing for Dassault, will probably soon be changed, with the French Air Porce acquiring at least a token number of F-1 M53s. It will be done, however, over objections of the air force. which does not want different versions of the same F-1 plane.

Separate Decisions

Despite desires at both NATO and SHAPE to standardize the new planes, it now appears that political pressures will force the four countries to make separate decisions. Though officially they are saving nothing, several private opinions have indicated that Belgium, seeking 118 planes, is leaning toward the Mirage; Holland seeking 105 planes, is leaning toward the YF-17, with the Danes and Norwegians delaying their choice for another year or

According to these views, the Belgian Defense Ministry, which has always had a close relationship to Dassault. feels it cannot resist the French offer. The Dutch company, Fokker, partly owned by Northrop, gives the Northrop plane an advantage in the Netherlands. The Danes and Norwegians, neither of which has in the past, now must consider their actions in light of their relationships to the European Economic Community, Norway, which has a free-trade status with the community, recently was visited by an 18-man team from Dassault, but the Norwegians, it is said, do not want a French plane.

West Germany, whose weight could be decisive in a competition such as this, has special problems. The West Germans have some 600 (out of an original 800) Starfighters left, and recently began replacement through the purchase of 200 F-4 Phantoms. The West Germans also are involved in joint production of the MRCA which flew for the first time this month. The MRCA's projected cost of about $10 million per plane has kept Bonn from thinking of immediate replacement of its F-104s, but Bonn eventually is expected to order some 250 lightweight planes-

either American or French. Germans Torn

The West Germans, like the other four, are torn between the need to nourish a European industry and what most technicians see as the superiority of the American prototypes. Bonn also remembers the French refusal to participate in the MRCA regram, a decision which led to Prance's own ACF program.
The Americans believe quite simply that only naked political pressure could bring Belgium to choose the Mirage. But this is to underestimate the feeling in many European quarters that the French aircraft industry is the only hope for maintaining a strong European aircraft industry, especially if the Dassault-Breguet group eventually is nationalized, as many expect. There is a growing feeling in Europe that the absurd and costly duplication of planes in Europesuch as the MRCA-ACF rivalry or the Jaguar-Mirage F1-must ended if Europe is to close the 5-to-10-year aircraft technology gap with America. The obvious loser in this struggle is NATO and the alliance. Instead of all members flying a single plane, simplifying ground maintenance, crew requirements, languages and replacement problems, the diversification will be worse than ever. Whereas the Starlighter was the standard plane in the last generation, in the next, the allies will be flying Mirages, Cobras, Phantoms, Jaguars, MRCAs and ACPs while the Warsa,w Pact countries all fly MiGs. As for standardization, one European 'non-French' remarked, "Why don't the Americans buy the Mirage?"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (AP). -Attorney General William Saxbe says the Ford administration's conditional amnesty plan for Vietnam-era draft dodgers will require at least "an act of

Mr. Saxbe said last night that the amnesty will carry an assurance that the men will not be imprisoned. "What we're talking about is that we're going to give these people a chance if they want it." he said.

President Ford has asked the Justice and Defense Departments to develop proposals that would allow fugitive draft evaders and deserters to return to the United States under certain conditions. Mr. Saxbe said the administration will insist on the "act of contrition." A draft dodger will "have to come into either the Draft Board, the U.S. attorney, the state Selective Servic; headquarters or a special commission and say, I'm sorry, I want to

He said the medicine could "run from an extreme of two years of substantial assistance to some hospital some public works, some good works of various kinds . that's the most ne can expect," down to a minimum requirement of an apprerance at a quasi-judicial proceeding at which charges would be dropped for a promise of

Despite Drought, Butz Sees No Reason for Food 'Panic'

By Jack Egan

WASHINTON, Aug. 27 (WP).— Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz said yesterday that there was no reason for "panic buying" of food supplies despite the substantial effects of this summer's drought on U.S. crop prospects. He also predicted that retail food prices would rise less than 10 per cent in 1975.

However, Agriculture Department economists have recently raised their projections of this year's increase in retail food prices from 13 to 15 per cent. Other administration forecasts peg the annual rise at about 10 per cent. However, further cuts in farm output-coupled with continued strong demand—could put the annual increase as high as 19 per cent, according to the latest national food situation re-

The Agriculture Department also released a report yesterday on the farm-to-retail-price spread for red meat, which it said was higher at the end of 1973 and in the first half of 1974 than at any time in the last 10 years.

The Difference

The spread-the difference beween what the farmer is paid for the raw product and what the shopper pays for the finished averaged around 55 cents from March to July of this year, almost double the 29-cent spread

Based on "circumstantial evidence," the report said, "it appears that the recent increase in meat-price spreads was caused partially by food retailers changing their pricing policies to increase profits in their meat de-

Asked about an earlier report from a Coast Guard source that there has been a pattern involving 25 to 30 missing motor yachts that could have been hijacked for the running of drugs from Caribbean countries to the southeast-ern coast of the United States. the spokesman confirmed that the number was correct but said he could not speculate as to the causes of the disappearances until the yachts were found.

Coast Guard officials in New York, Mismi and Houston also said they had no evidence of large numbers of boats being hijacked by drug smugglers.

"It's a grossly exaggerated report," said Bill Stevens, who has been involved for 24 years in Caribbean yachting and runs a New York City company that manages about 100 Caribbean charter boats. "To our knowledge. there have been maybe two or three such cases." he said.

Bill Robinson, the editor of Yachting magazine, said he bad heard of only one case of boat hijscking by smugglers. He said that it was extremely unlikely that such cases would go unre-

Quebec's New Language Law Draws Mounting Opposition

By William Borders

MONTREAL, Aug. 27 (NYT).- six years in office, he has worked Quebec's new language law. which has been the subject of ing a program that has upgraded bitter controversy here, is also the French language in Ottawa increasingly generating oppositions increasingly generating opposition across Canada's nine other

The law, which makes French the official language of Quebec Province with a preferred status over English, has been strongly condemned on radio and television as far west as Vancouver, on Canada's west coast, since its enactment late last nonth.

In New Brunswick, on Canada's east coast, the provincial premier has asked Prime Minister Plerre Elliott Trudeau to refer the law to the Canadian Supreme Court for a ruling on its constitution-

In Churchill Manitobs. small scaport on Hudson Bay, a hus driver displaying detailed knowledge of the legislation, said: "After all the time and money we've spent to make Canada a two-language country, to think that Quebec would go and take such a backward step." Several constitutional experts have expressed doubts about the provincial law and there is increasing pressure for some action from Mr. Trudeau, who, although he is a Montreal French Canadlan, is thought to consider the legislation unwise.

Preferred Language . The law, an attempt to end 300 years of ambiguity about language in Quebec, makes French the preferred language of commerce, government, the courts and education in this province of six million inhabi-

Quebec's premier, Robert Bourassa, who like almost everyone else in Quebec politics, is a French Canadian, said:

"Henceforth, there is an officially French state in North America. It is a moment of great pride for all of us." Because the new law leaves wide discretionary powers to the civil servants who will administer it, there are still many unanswered questions about how it will change Quebec's daily life. But since it makes French the preferred language, corporations that use French in their internal communications, for example, will be more likely to get provincial government contracts than those that do not. Many of the law's provisions simply give legal force to what has become established practice in Quebec, like the requirement that all English-language corporate names have French versions as well or that professional people be proficient in French. Linguistic Rights The law guarantees the linguistic rights of the 13 per cent whose native language is English, including the right to public education of their children in their own language. But many of Quebec's English Canadians, who have been among the richest and the most powerful people here, regard the legislation as a confirmation that their days as an elite are over. They have staged emotional protest rallies ant' some Canadians say that the English-speaking community here is now more resentful than it has ever been before. The most militant French-

speaking separatists also oppose the language law, because they maintain that it does not go far enough in preserving the French language, which they see as under assault from all sides, Although relatively few Canadians outside Quebec speak French, the country is officially

The 14-volume study, which is certain to stir criticism, took two years to complete and was de-scribed by AEC officials recently as the most thorough ever undertaken of risks posed to the public by the estimated 100 nuclear power plants that will be in operation in the United States by

"The consequences of potential reactor accidents are no larger and, in many cases, are much smaller than those of non-nuclear accidents," the study stated as its principal conclusion.

One in a Billion

According to statistics contained in the study, it was estimated that in any year there was but one chance in a billion that a nuclear power plant would fail accidentally and that the ensuing release of radiation would cause - ny as several thousand deaths. Critics of atomic power have long alleged that accidents with such consequences were a distinct possibility.

Dr. Dixie Lee Ray, AEC chairman, said at a news conference that the study indicated "there is no question [but] that the nuclear industry comes off very

"But there is no such thing as zero risk," she added.

Dr. Norman Rasmussen, professor of nuclear engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, directed the study, which was conducted by 60 specialists, 10 of whom are commission employees.- Most of the work, which cost $3 million, was conducted at the commission's headquarters.

"At no time did the AEC influence the study," Dr. Ray said, of the people in the province adding that it would be "a serious mission cannot be objective.

Financial Risk

In a telephone interview, Dr. Ford asked why the builders of nuclear power plants and the public utilities that operate them still refuse to accept the financial risk of accidents that are possible "if the statistics are so much in their favor?"

Dr. Ford said that, but for the Price-Anderson Act, which would use federal funds to indemnify victims for losses exceeding $110 million suffered through reactor accidents, "there would be no new plants at all."

Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, expressed skepticism about the study's findings. He said that he doubted that the statistical -sis was either valid or pos-

There are now 51 plants in operation. About 100 are expected to be generating electric power by the end of the decade. The study devoted itself to the large water-cooled reactors now in use. rather than the high-temperature gas-cooled and liquid-metal fartbreeder reactors that are under development and are expected to go into service about 1990.

Local Population In examining reactor safety, the study considered how it would affect the 15 million people or more now living within 20 miles of a nuclear power reactor, rather than the total population.

Dr. Rasmussen explained that the nation's total population was not at risk because the detonation of nuclear power plants, like atomic bombs, was "impossible because of the fuel they use." In seeking to define risk, the study reported that the likelihood of being injured in any one year in a reactor accident is "one chance in 150 million.

"From a broader societal viewpoint, one individual of the 15 militon people living in the vicini-ty of 100 reactors might be killed and two individuals might be injured every 25 years," the study

The Lonely Eagle

They called him the "Lone Eagle" when celebrated by mass adulation of the spectache new solo to Paris in 1927, and evoked a temple of adulation that was as much an echo of the times as a reflection of his own will, courage and skill. Without those, Charles Augustus Lindbergh would have faded from public recollection, like so many other heroes and heroines of an age of bally. hoo. With them, he lived to make many contributions to technology and to controversy, in alternating periods of encompassing publicity and privacy. And when he died and was buried, in deliberately understated simplicity in the tranquillity of Kipahulu, on Maui, he could still be called an enigma of his times—a lonely eagle.

He had the courage of his convictions, and if they sent him in the Spirit of St. Louis to Paris, or sustained him through the kidnapping and death of his son, when the searchlight of popular curiosity was turned on him even more pitllessly than in his first days of triumph, he bore himself well. Nor did he lack dignity when, in his gravest public error, he equated Nazi Germany with Western civilization, and sought to prevent the United States from joining to cast it out. His researches, in aeronautics, in geography, in-with Dr. Alexis Carrel-the technology of healing, were notable. His final efforts toward the conservation of the earth's primitive resources of men and materials were effective and praiseworthy. Clearly, Lindbergh was far more than an inflatable mannikin pumped to more than human size by the gassy tendencies of the 1920s, when reality was likely to be obscured, and

But how did that adulation deflect and how did it strengthen Lindbergh? Perhaps his widow, Anne Morrow Lindbergh, a writer of grace, sensitivity and insight, could tell. But few others can peer behind the pendulum swings of praise and attack that marked his public life, or determine just how individuality, well marked, and based on exceptional personal qualities, could becme a brand of elitism that was to influence, to his detriment, his approach to human affairs.

Charles Lindbergh was, without question, significant figure of his times, emerging from obscurity and seeking it again, victim of and gainer by an age of far-reaching curiosity which had swift means of satisfying itself. He was an explorer who, when it was a matter of exploiting technical resources for his searches, worked well and productively; in the realm of ideas his curious limitations set up walls beyond which he could not

Perhaps, like Robert Louis Stevenson, who also rests on a Polynesian hillside, "the hunter home" might serve as Lindbergh's epitaph: He did not always know what game he sought, nor was he always successful in winning what he was after; his legacy is not the affection Stevenson still holds. nor will Lindbergh's deeds have the lasting quality of the author's. But Lindbergh never rested from his quest for something of importance until he reached his grave by

The Decline of the Lion

For almost six decades, the mountainous, remote northeastern African empire of Ethiopia has been ruled by the firm hand of Emperor Hailie Selassie, known to his subjects as the King of Kings, the Conquering Lion of Judah. He was for decades Africa's best known leader and statesman, a beleaguered symbol of the fight against Fascism before World War II and the personification of the glories of the continent's precolonial past. His rule extended to every hamlet of his kingdom, and nothing was done that he might disapprove of in the mildest of ways.

The days of the rule of the Lion, at age 82, have all but ended. The middle level of his army is in control of most of the country. The military has nationalized his palace; his friends from the ruling class languish in jail, and the once all-powerful ruler is at best today a constitutional monarch. a symbol of the state, but not a political leader who can work his will on events to any great extent. Little by little he is being forced to cede even the semblance of power. Ethiopia is headed for another era.

In this passage of power, even though the West loses one of its staunchest friends in Africa, there is a hopeful side for the people of Ethiopia. Traditionally, it has been one of the poorest countries on the continent. Its peasants have been through a series of recent food shortages; political corruption was rampant and land reform impossible. The ruling class of the Amheras was unyleiding in its opposition to any reordering of the wealth of the society. Now many of them are among the 300 or so formerly powerful landed rulers who are in sail while the army decides the fate of Ethiopia.

This development has been several years in the making, brought about by the food chortages, inflation, a government that was increasingly remote from the needs of its people and a cultural and religious tradition that resisted many changes that are crucial in the modern age. One example of the impact of cultural and religious tradition is Ethlopia's 150 days a year of fasting, imposed by the Coptic Church. Government workers complained to no avail that spending almost half the year in fasting was bringing chaos to the country's economy. The elders would not budge. Finally, after two governments failed, the military stepped in and took over, wresting power from the ruling class in general and from Selassie in particular.

The Lion of Judah was an enduring figure on the world scene. His valiant battle against the Italian invaders in 1936 won for him and for Ethiopia the praise of the world. His visits to the United States always evoked a great deal of interest because his style was so impressive in a man only 5 feet 2 inches tall. His real stature was hard to estimate, just as it has always been hard for friends of Ethiopia to understand why the Emperor permitted his countrymen to continue to languish in painful poverty while a ruling class grew fatter and fatter and more corrupt with each passing day.

* * * What the military will be able to accomplish remains problematical. The needs of the peasants and urhan underclass are stargering. The machinery of government is still years behind the governments of many other countries on the continent, and the country is still in the midst of a great hunger. In the past, great change in the Ethiopian leadership has been accompanied by great upheaval. So far, the military has assumed control without any serious violence. If that should continue to be the case, it would augur well for change in Ethiopia. a change its people desperately need.

Diplomacy and Cyprus

Yet if Greece is to return to Geneva, there will also have to be some diplomatic work in Ankara. There have been one or two signs recently that Turkey regards the extent of the territory it occupies in Cyprus as negotiable, but still not enough to bring back the Greeks to the negotiating table. Here the diplomacy will have to come primarily from the United States and the message is a relatively simple one: The biggest danger facing Turkey at present is overconfidence. It is one thing to win a military victory, another to enforce a military solution. The Turks need to show flexibility now before it becomes too late.

-From the Financial Times (London).

The important thing is not that Greece should be seen to be in the right, but that Turkey should make concessions. Putting Turkey in the dock of a kind of international kangaroo court is hardly likely to achieve that result. What is needed is for Turkey's leaders to be convinced by their friends (which means essentially the Americans, though Pakistan and Iran may also have a role to play) that concessions will be in their interests and those of the Turkish Cyptiots.

—From the Times (London).

Spanish Sahara Claims Relations between Morocco and Mauritania are risking complete deterioration over rival claims to the Spanish Sahara. . . . The polemics between Morocco and Mauritania do not cease to worsen, and one cannot exclude an open crisis between the two countries, or even confrontations by interposed nationalist movements. Furthermore, [Morocco's King] Hassan II clearly hinted, after Madrid's decision to organize a referendum. that he would not hesitate to resort to another method than the diplomatic route. But it is likely that the Moroccan King will look twice before engaging in a test of strength with Madrid: In the first place because he is in an inferior position militarily, and perhaps more importantly because he will hesitate to compromise fruitful relations of cooperation that his country has maintained with Spain since the end of the protectorate.

Turkish Premier Ecevit initially told me it would be "difficult" for Turkey to continue in the alliance if Greek-Turkish problems weren't first solved. Later he thought Turkey could "fill up the gap" created by Greece's withdrawal.

U.S. Warning

Washington warned Greece and Turkey they would be cut off from American arms supplies if they went to war. This particularly threatened Greece, which expects to get another squadron of F-4 Phantoms next month.

Separatism

For better than a year the East Berlin regime, as part of its drive toward separatism and demarcation, has been trying to expunge the word "German" and to obliterate all references to "Germany" wherever possible.

Its national anthem is no longer being sung, merely hummed or played, because there is a passage in it that refers to "Germany, our united fatherland."

substituted the sign "DDR." That was a blow to those West Germans dedicated and committed to the idea of eventual reunification. But an even bigger blow was the appearance on the market of a paste-on emblem reading "RRD."

A Greek Military Scandal

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON,-Blatant misuse of American military aid by the ousted Greek military dictatorship, which probably caused the junta's fatal inaction in the Cyptus crisis, is about to be exposed in a major international scandal threatening the per-manent end of U.S. military aid to Greece and widening the dangerous Washington-Athens breach.

This scandal a closely-held secret within the new civilian government of Premier Constantine Caramanlis (which had nothing whatever to do with it), may help explain the sudden collapse of the military junta following Turkey's investon of Cyprus. Turkey's more was triggered by the Greek junta's overthrow of Archbishop Makarios as President of Cyprus on July 15.

Caramanlis and his top sides, including Foreign Minister George Mayros, are convinced the junta was preparing for military opera-tions across the Turkish border in Thrace immediately following Turkey's decision to intervene militarily on Cyprus. But when the junta mobilized the Greek reserves, military stores of U.S. aid—rifles, ammunition, boots, machine guns and rockets -were discovered to be totally insdequate.

Filler in Crates

Crates of the American M-16 rifle, for one example, were found to contain one or two layers of rifles at the top, with rocks, wood and other filler material hidden

The discovery of this shocking shortfall of arms and equipment was the final nail in the coffin of the junta, already under heavy political pressures for its strinbling Cyprus adventure.

The full extent of the disappearance of American arms aid still not known. Some wellinformed experts on the outrages perpetrated by seven years of Greek military rule believe the arms were sold for each to foreign countries, possibly in Black Africa, behind the backs of regular military commanders.

But wholly anart from the day. astating impact on the junta itself, the discovery of the shortraises profound questions about Greece's military defenses in its role as a member of NATO. Caramanits, pressured by the Turkish Cyprus invasion into an anti-American posture, withdrew Greece from the military arm of NATO two weeks ago.

Tinmpara

High officials here are unaware of the Caramanlis-Mayros investigation which revealed the junta's inability to mobilize the Greek reserve. That investigation is now centered on three major military depots: Attica, the site in the Athens-Piracus area of major Greek military installations, Lerissa, in central Greece, the headquarters of the First Army, and Salonika, Greece's seccond city and the headquarters of the Third Army Corps.

Although U.S. administration officials are in the dark, key members of four congressional committees the Foreign Rela-tions and Armed Services Committees of both Senate and House -have been apprised of the scan-dal by Elias Demetracopoulos, the best-informed anti-junta Greek exile here the past seven years. He recently returned to Wash-ington from high-level talks in Geneva with officials of the Caramanlia government.

Key congressional committee members, including one senator who supported U.S. military aid to Greece even during the military dictatorship, will soon de-

Covering the 'Crazy Fool' Who Flew the Ocean

By Waverley Root

PARIS, Aug. 27 (INT) .- On reported for work at the office of the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune; I had been a member of its day staff for about a week. B. J. Kospoth, the city editor, lifted his head to acknowledge my arrival. "The crazy fool!" he said. "He'll never make it." And cackled.

"Who'll never make it?" 'I asked.

"Feller named Lindbergh. Thinks he's going to fly the At-lantic." He cackled again. Kospoth had a peculiar laugh, midway between the whinny of a soprano horse and a short blast from a rusty machine gun. It fascinated the managing editor's French wife, who had made a verb out of it. She would sit beside her husband's desk, her eyes fixed, sidewise, on Kospoth, whispering at intervals, "Is he going to kospother?"

She should have been in the office that day. Kospoth lifted his head at half-hour intervals to bay, "The crazy fool! He'll never make it." Cackle.

I left the office at the end of my work day assuming also that he would never make it. At that time I had faith in the infallibility of city editors, Besides, nobody had sighted Lindbergh over the Atlantic I must have shire I had no radio; few people nothered with them in 1927, for they made peculiar noises. So I arrived at the office on the morning of May 22 in unwitting inn rence of what everybody else in Paris seemed to know

Morning After

"Where the hell you been?" Respoth snarled. "Get over to the embessy right away and cover the press conference." Whel press conference?" I cackle. Disappointment? I spent the next two weeks loping after Lindbergh, who was being shuttled at an exhausting pace from one celebration to another, in utter bewilderment at the fuss everybody was making over him. This close view compensated to some extent for laving missed the arrival, about which I was copiously filled in by my colleagues. As I recall the details today, Lindbergh's plane was first sighted as it crossed the Iruh coast: that allowed time for a human tidal wave to pour out of Paris to Le Bourget, then the capital's only sirfield, and field is what it was, unless my memory has slipped a cogno runways, just graca. After that first sighting, I believe, he was not reported again until the noise of his motors was heard over Le Bourget, by then black with people. This surprised Lindbergh; he wondered what the crowd was doing there and, not wanting to lead anyone astray by barging into a party to which he had not been invited, explained to the first persons who reached the plane, My name's Lindbergh." It was

A souvenir hunter yanked the aviator's helmet from his head and brandished it triumphantly. in the air. For those behind them, this was an identifying sign; they hoisted the souvenir hunter onto their shoulders and bore the wrong hero away. The diversion gave better-informed welcomers a chance to extricate Lindbergh from his plane and batter a way through the mob to the comparative calm of the administration building.

It was anything but calm elsewhere on the field. The newspapermen trying to cover the story engaged in an epic battle for possession of the telephones. The United Press, cannily, had made a deal with someone in authority for exclusive use of all public telephone lines, and every booth was occupied by someone hired by UP to keep the line open and the door shut against the competition. Taking no time out to admire the foresightedness of this organization, the representatives of rival news-gathering institutions reacted by overturning the booth occupied by the chief UP cor-respondent, Praying it, doorside down, on the floor, within it the imprisoned correspondent in the company of a useless phone whose wires had been ripped ATTAY. In the battle royal which fol-lowed, everybody lost. Editors paced their Paris offices, chewing their nails to the quick as they waited for calls that never came; finally reporters began straggling in after baving fought their way through the greatest traffic tie-up Paris had ever experienced which had blocked the road all the way from Paris to Le Bourget.

In the office of the Paris Chicago Tribune, news editor Jules Frantz, taking advantage of a luli when the soate of conv began to flow more slowly, nipped down to the composing room to see whether the managing editor, who was making up the paper, needed help. He found the printers locking up the front-page form to trundle it away. There was a twocolumn head-or perhaps even three—on the Lindbergh story. Frantz screamed. "My God!" he shouted. "You've got to put a banner on that story! Every paper in the world will have a banner on it tomorrow except the Deutscher Tageblatt!"

The ME waved the form away to the room where the page mals were made; "Can't change it now," he said. "I'll miss my bus." He was a man convinced that the whole aim of journalism was to get the paper on the press in time to catch the 2 a.m. bus home. The Chicago Tribine appeared with a miser-ly head on the biggest story since the Versailles Treaty. Frantz was right—or nearly right Every other paper in the world did carry an eight-column banner-including the Deutscher Tacebiaii.

Hank Wales, chief Paris correspondent for the home edition of the Chicago Tribune and its then flourishing foreign news service, had had a similar brush earlier in the evening. He had descended personally to the composing room to hand directly to the editor a carbon of the exclusive interview with Lindbergh which he was cabling to Chicago a tremendous concession, for the foreign news service considered the Paris edition as a form of vermin, and was more given to hiding its dispatches from it than to offering them.

"We don't need it," the ME told him, visibly irritated. "We've got the story. He landed. We're reporting if. That's all there

Fake Interview. Wales, never a man to be caught without an answer, was stunned into speechlessness this time. He turned and walked back unstairs, carrying the story for which Chicago subsequently sent him a bonus of $500, a princely sum in those days. It is painful to be obliged to record now that the interview was a fake. Wales, a wily operator. had decided that it would be a waste of time making the long trip to Le Bourget when he could just as well stay in his office and write a story on what he assumed Lindbergh would be likely to say. Being nobody's fool, he made arrangements with the embassy, where he was on the best of terms, to make sure that Lindbergh would neither deny that he had given an interview nor utter anything subsequently which would con-tradict what Wales a volunteer ought to say. As a matter of fact, Lindbergh had little chance to contradict or confirm anything. During his entire stay in Paris, there were two press conferences a day at I can remember his saying at any of them was. "Uh." would then be interrupted. The profedure was invariable. Twice day I would push my way raugh the growd which ramained permanently stationed outside the embassy hoping to catch a glimpse of its hero, to see Lindbergh descend the staus into the embassy entrance hall.

speech writer, had decided he

Ambassador Myron Herrick was at one side of him, holding his left arm in a vice-like grip though he feared he would get away (Lindbergh often looked as if he wanted to) and the representative of the company which had built the Spirit of St. Louis had a similar arm lock on the right. The trio stopped a few steps from the bottom. The first question came. Lindbergh would open his mouth, but before he could answer, the ambassador would answer for him. if political implications were involved, or the aircraft man if it were a matter of the flight.

Voice of the Press Only once were both of them stymied, and it was Hank Wales who did it. "Say, Lindy." he demanded in his rasping voice, speaking from the hole in the corner of his mouth where he usually kept his cigar, "did you have a crapper in that plane? For the first time, Lindbergh had a chance to answer a question himself. He let it pass. The unpression I gained as I followed Lindbergh around through reception after reception, banquet after banquet honor after honor, was that he was a nice, naïve, simple youngster, sincerely unaware of the importance of his exploit and rather annoyed by the ceremonies. I recall the first luncheon given for him at the Clos Normand, a now vanished restaurant on the edge of the Bois de Boulogne. A bewildering forest of glasses bloomed behind each plate. The hosts, whoever they were, had decided that at least half a dozen wines were required to rise fittingly to the occasion. Lindbergh regarded them with wonder. Then he pushed all of them out of his way and settled for mineral water. The gap between the guileless boy and the man who had succeeded in a magnificent exploit was bridged when Lind-bergt had a quiet lunch with the then small Anglo-American Press Association. There were somewhere between six and ten of us, as I remember it, and this time Lindbergh did the talking. The plane company's man was there, but he hardly opened his mouth as Lindbergh explained the technical details of the flight with a mastery which made it clear why he had succeeded.

No Callow Youth

He was no longer a callow youth, but a man who had comprehended clearly the prob-lems he faced and had found the correct solutions to them with sure clarity. They were risky, they required courage, but they were the solutions which offered the best chance of success. There was the question of whether or not to take io-he had to balance and cumbersomeness weight against the chance that given the limited range of the times. it would not be of much use in many circumstances. He had to calculate exactly the point at which the weight of another gallon of gasoline would use up the added fuel simply carrying itself-after which more fuel would mean less distance.

Most important of all, he had to decide whether to take off across the unflown Atlantic with only one engine to carry him across instead of two. He set-tled for one, "because," as I recall his answer, in gist, "If one of the two failed. I couldn't stay up very long anyway on one, and certainly couldn't make my goal; and with two, there was twice as much chance of engine failure." He bet on a single engine, and he won.

Speaking on his own, Lindbergh made it sound easy. He had decided to fly a plane to Paris, so he had hopped off from New York, set a beeline course for Paris, and landed when he got there. It was as simple as that. Anybody could do it. But I spent the next three years practically living at Le Bourget, watching planes take off to reach, in the end. nowhere, or waiting for planes that never arrived. It became

He was last in the news in 1969 when a West German court rejected his appeal for a state pen-sion as an opponent of the Nazis. The court ruled that Strasser had been a personal opponent of Hitler rather than of Nazism.

Strasser, the leading Nazi publicist in the 1920s, was a party left-winger who resisted Hitler's ideological domination of the fledgling movement. In 1930, he broke with the Nazis and founded his own "Black Front" opposition

A fugitive from the Gestapo after the Nazis came to power in 1933, Strasser was stripped of Ger-man citizenship during the 1934 purge of the party. Among those executed was his older brother, Gregor, one of the first Nazi ad-ministrators. As an exile in Canada, Strasser

SALZBURG, Austria (IHT).— This year's new production of Die Zauberflöte," the 13th in the Salzburg Festival's often illustrious line, was in the hands of the festival's reigning artistic Lions-Giorgio Strehler and Herbert von Karajan-in the first collaboration of their projected series of joint Mozart productions.

It got off to a bumpy start. The festival-opening performance split critical opinion into sev-eral camps. Part of the audience booed Strehler, who tetired from the scene indicating he wanted out of his Salzburg contract. He did not, it seems, have enough rehearsal time in the Large Festspielhaus to put everything in order; technical problems were evident at the premiere, and Ka-

It can only be hoped that all this blows over. At its fifth performance this "Magic Flute"while musically problematic-was one rich in theatrical imagination, ingenious in its use of the theater's space and technical possibilities, and true to the spirit-and often the letter-of Mozart and his actor-librettist,

Stage Magic

Strehler and his designer, Luciano Damiani, used the theater's ultra-modern equipment to evoke the Viennese folk theater's fairytale world, with its delight in stage magic for its own sake that impregnates Schikaneder's libretto. There were also ideas recognizably borrowed from other Strehler productions-Papageno's

> . But the main inspiration was the opera's book. "The mountains separate and the stage is transformed into a magnificent space. The Queen of the Night sits on a throne adorned with transparent stars"; or "... Sarastro arrives on a triumphal chariot drawn by six lions..." were instructions from the book given almost literal form on the stage, And where the book was not literally followed, its cus-tent-like enclosure that formed the playing area; the serpent that menaced Tamino was a huge toy, shattered into three parts at a gesture from the Three Lacles, then reassembled before being hauled off into the wings. "The stage is transformed," the stage instructions say frequently, and every time Strehler and Damiani transform the stage before the audience's eyes, without hiding the means. Theater for theater's sake to create the fairy tale for adults that is "Die Zauberflöte." And Strehler made his characters move, too. Not just the capering Papageno, but the all too often static chorus of priests, which here was constantly in purposeful motion, its antiphonal responses to Serastro given physical expression. The spoken dialogue, generally considered an emNight) and (Pamina) in barrassment to be reduced to a minimum, was employed here at length-and sometimes in words not written by Schikaneder-to reinforce the atmosphere of the

Some blamed this extensive use of the dialogue for the production's occasional longueurs, but the chief culprit here was Karajan, whose finely sculpted con-ducting included some deadly slow tempos that robbed several num-bers (the "Bei Männern" duet, for instance) of their life. If the whole opera had had the pace and springy vitality of the over-ture, there would be little to complain of.

The casting was variable, ranging from Edith Mathia's deliciously sung and beautifully spoken ly sung and beautifully spoken Pamina, Prey's lively and comic Papageno, and Jose van Dam's expressive Speaker, to Rene Kollo's stalwart figure but unpoetic phrasing as Tamino, Peter Meven's routine Sarastro, and Louise Lebrun's barely adequate struggla with the Onesn of the struggle with the Queen of the Night's colorature. The lesser parts were handsomely cast, particularly Reri Grist's pert and lively Papagena, the Three Ladles (Jane Marsh, Trudeliese Schmidt, Sylvia Anderson), and the Three Boys, delectably sung by three Bad Tölz choirboys—winged and sometimes operating from the orchestra pit, sometimes from 2 orchestra pit, sometimes from a shell-shaped flying machine. Despite its delights, this pro-duction did have the feeling of a work in progress—one that can be more fully developed in succeeding festivals and, more important, one that can be more fully realized in rapport between stage director and conductor.

Strehler and Damiani were also represented this year in their 1965 production of "The Abduc-tion from the Seragito," which has broken all Salzburg operatic records for durability. This "Magic Flute," if yet unfinished, is a worthy successor in conception, already rich in achievement and even richer in potential.

The rich Salzburg concert ac-tivity—spread out among the prestige-heavy Vienna Philhar-monic concerts and the traditional Mozart Matinees, serenades and chamber concerts—had their full quots of anticipation, fulfillment and disappointment.

Two conductor-planist pairings with the Philharmonic excited a lot of attention, but Sviatoslav Richter cancelled his scheduled appearance with Karl Böhm, while Maurizio Pollini's performance of the Schumann concerto with Karajan was a letdown, as both conductor and pianist seemed to be trying to outdo each other in restraint until midway in the final movement, when Pollini brilliantly asserted himself. Karajan and the orchestra brought down the house after the intermission with a bravura per-formance of Dvorak's Eighth Symphony, although treating this music as an orchestral showplece effectively nullified its Bohemian folk atmosphere.
But Pollini more than fulfilled

the expectations aroused by his solo recital, in which he traversed Schoenberg's entire output for piano in one densely packed hour before the intermission, then icilowed this with two Besthoven sonates, including an electrifying performance of the "Waldstein," plus some Schubert and Chopin encores. It was music-making on Such was D'Annunzio's estimate of her acting.

She was the daughter of an road carriage when her parents, members of an itinerant troupe, were traveling between Venice and Vigevano. At 14 she played Juliet in the Roman arens at Verons. The popular Rossi engaged her as leading lady of his company and she was soon famous. In a repertory of Dumas fils, Goldoni and Ibsen she made triumphant tours of Italy and then of France, Germany, Austria, the United States, South America and Great Britain. A London engagement clashed with that of Sarah Bernhardt-both actresses electing to play Suder-mann's "Magda." They were compared by the critics—to Duse's advantage.

Retirement

She had a sensational loveaffair with D'Annunzio, who wrote poetic dramas which she interpreted. Before World War L exhausted and alling, she withdrew into retirement in Florence. But in 1923 loneliness and neces-sity brought her back to the boards. She electrified London and packed the Metropolitan Opera House in New York at the premiere of "The Lady From the Sea." As its disputed heroine she made no effort to disguise her age. She was 63 and silverhaired, but realism had ever been her forte. Her acting had a larger-than-life grandeur. Hers extended from the shoulder, has about it something of melancholy," wrote George Jean Nathan "In the extended right arm of Eleonora Duse were all the tears of Tristan and Isolde." Her farewell American tour took her scross the continent and in Los Angeles she played before the Hollywood noblity. Later she was in the East again and, going to perform Marco Praga's "La Porta Chiusa" at a Pittsburgh theater, she struggled to open the blocked stage-door in a wintry storm. She caught pneumonia and died in a hotel the next day. The fascination of her life lingers and will remain. There is a dramatic unity to her story which emerges as a gorgeous paean to the Rizzoli has now taken over the production and Fellini is searching for a Casanova.

ENTERTAINMENT IN NEW YORK

TEW YORK, Aug. 27 (IHT).-This is now critics for the New York Times rate new films:

"Newman's Law," directed by Richard Heffron, trots out the mossy formula Nora Sayre thinks should be given at least one month's rest: "An incorruptible detective is accused of being on the take and is therefore suspended." Hence, says Sayre, "the outraged law-lover continues to investigate the case on his own. There's hardly an episode in this picture that you haven't seen be-fore. It's disheartening to see George Peppard playing the quasi-Serpico. Here, he hardly bothers to act. Several good black -Roger Robinson, for example—are wasted in this movie. which is also far too gloomy to

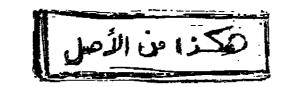

"The Girl from Petrovka" directed by Robert Ellis Miller, is

"gluey .romance" between a young Russian (Goldie Hawn) and an Anterican newsman (Hal Holbrook). Nora Sayre did not enjoy the film which, she says, portrays the Soviet Union as "a deeply dismal country where people declare their love in graveyards, and sheets of rain or heavy snow descend when they're depressed." The script, based on the book by George Feiler, does not aid the performers, says Sayre, "We know that Miss Hawn can act. But her abundant energles have been made to seem merely winsome here.... Hal Holbrooke, who's bewitched by this sprightly depressive, has little to do beyond shaking his head when he thinks of her or smiling indulgently when he looks at It's hard to imagine what audience this movie was made for. Perhaps it might amuse

Instead, he said the new agency "will have to look at each industry separately—what we need is a very flexible system." His comments were the first indication that the Council on Wage and Price Stability, signed into law by President Ford on Saturday, would use a guidepost technique. Mr. Simon stressed that the wage-price guidelines he foresees would not be formal, but more of a "modus operandi" under which the council would try to function. "They will have to do something about broad areas of wage and price increases," he said, "and you can call them guidelines if you want." Mr. Simon said that "I don't

Officials now say that corn exports could be in a range of 750 million to 900 million bushels, down from an earlier prediction of 1.15 billion bushels and actual projected exports in the current season (ending Sept. 30) of 1.25 billion bushels. Wheat exports now are expected to total 900 million to one billion bushels, compared to earlier forecasts of one billion or better and actual shipments of 1.15 billion bushels in the 1973-74 crop season.

Soybean exports are expected to dip to between 515 and 535 million bushels from previous estimates of 545 million to 585 million. Agriculture Department officials now expect that 340 million to 360 million bushels of corn will be left over at the end of the 1974-75 season, just before the 1975 harvest comes in. But graintrade experts think that the carry-over could end up at around 700 million bushels because of lower domestic and foreign demand. About 428 million bushels are expected to be in the carryover at the end of the current

Firms' Cash Position Worries U.S. Experts

MEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).— Not since the Penn Central collapsed in mid-1970 have the clouds hung so heavy and dark over Wall Street.

Once again analysts are won-dering if the country is in danger of a liquidity crists that could spread like a fever through today's debt-burdened businesses, tossing one after another into

Despite glowing reports of cor-porate profits this year, some leading financial analysts are worried that the healthy look may be only skin deep.

"We've been in a liquidity flap since about April," said one top economist for a major New York bank, who insisted on anonymity. e also cautioned against writing about liquidity in a way that might intensify fears in the financial community.

But there are worries. Tilford Gaines, senior vice-president and economist of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., said last week, "Liquidity strains in the nonfinancial business sector are really quite acute." To hide this fact, he said would be "like sticking your head in the sand."

Sees Bankruptcies Mr. Gaines, who was one of the first to spot the emerging liquidity crisis in 1970, expects to see "a rather large number of busi-ness failures" in the months ahead, particularly in sectors with "a lot of competition, low mark-ups, large inventory investments and small capitalization." Richard Worley, vice-president and economist at Goldman, Sachs

& Co., seems to see the same wr'ing on the wall. "Solvency will probably be a major problem for some isolated companies and maybe even some big ones," he says, but "that doesn't mean the problem will feed upon itself and infect the entire corporate sector." Liquidity is a word that is difficult to define and a concept that is difficult to measure. Used as a synonym for solvency, liquidity refers to a firm's ability to raise the cash necessary to meet its debts when they come due. What is critical in measuring a company's liquidity is not the absolute level of its cash (or short-term investments that can be speedily and cheaply turned into cash) but the relationship of cash to debts that must be paid Thus, corporate liquidity is usually measured by a ratio (or, more commonly, by a series of ratios) that pokes and probes at the depth and nature of business Statistics Don't Help

In recent months analysts have spewed forth ratios as fast as automatic serving machines toss out tennis balls for practice shots. Unfortunately, the flurry of statistics does not answer with any finality the questions at hand: Is corporate liquidity adequate? What if the economy goes into a deep slide? Most analysts seem to agree that during the last few decades corporations have been able to cut down necessary cash balances ecause of improved communications, faster banking services and computerized inventory manage-Moreover, economists say that higher interest rates since World War II have increased the incentive for pumping extra idle cash into interest-earning assets. What divides the experts is how much such trends have altered the level of desirable liquidity ratios. That is why First National City Bank reviewed the business liquidity situation in its March newsletter and concluded that "corporations are not unusually vulnerable to financial difficul-ties in 1974,7 while other analysts came to completely different con-Hyman Minsky, a bearish financial expert from Washington University in St. Louis, looked at liquidity ratios (including cash flow over total corporate liabilities and protected assets over total financial assets) and decided that "the financial structure The choice before the United States, he said, "is either con-tinuing unacceptable rates of inflation or a financial crisis followed by a deep depression." A similar gloomy view-without supportive ratios—comes from another financial bear, Albert Wojnilower, economist and director of First Boston Corp. He said that liquidity ratios "sour whenever, as now, prices rise faster than the money supply" and that the ratios today are a sign of "vulnerability" but not proof of what lies ahead Corporations, he said, "have a lot of profits today which they are naturally plowing back to yield more profits by investing in capital goods or in inventories," He explained: "As long as things go well, modern banks will continue to lend to these firms on their expected cash flow. It's only when things are not so good that banks start to look at the company's liquidity ratios, and worry that inventories might have to be sold at a loss or investment plans cut "The fact that banks are starting to look at ratios now means something," Mr. Wojnilower concluded ominously. It is the relative health of corporate profits that has convinced some economists to reject the notion of a chain-reaction liquidity crisis lurking down the road. Data pulled together by Irwin

Kellner, vice-president and econ-omist at Manufacturers Hanover, show what he calls a "surprisingly good profit picture, considering the sluggish nature of economic activity this year." Back to Boom

In U.S. Reach A Record Yield WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (WP)

-The Treasury paid a record 9.9 per cent interest rate to bill purchasers at yesterday's regular weekly auction, as the average yield on both the three-month and six-month securities soured by more than a percentage point to record highs. Most analysts relate the sharp increase to the Treasury's an-nouncement last week that it would sell an extra $2 billion in Treasury bills in a special auction tomorrow to meet its shortterm cash needs Because the announcement in-eased the bill supply to a market that was already swelling, the price of these bills went down. Since the bills are sold at a discount, the lower the price to the purchaser, the higher his interest On 91-day bills, of which the Treasury sold $2.8 billion, the rate averaged 9.908 per cent, compared with 8.816 per cent last week. On the $2 billion of six-month bills it sold, the Treasury paid an average rate of 9.930 per cent, up from last week's 8.899 per cent. At today's close in New York, three-month bills were quoted at an average of 9.68 per cent while six-month bills averaged 9.7 per boom year of 1986-about $73 billion (1958 dollars). Mr. Worley of Goldman, Sachs stresses the strength of another profit aggregate-cash flow as a percentage of manufacturers' sales—which is also at roughly the high reached during the midsixties boom. Economists who are worried about liquidity hope that corpora-burden themselves with the high One reason for the sick look of some liquidity ratios today is that most corporations have shunned the stock market—and the high-cost bond market too—in hopes that borrowing opportunities in both sectors would improve. Instead, they continue to worsen.

Price Increases Set by GM Affect Small Models Most hour, and 700 of the workers will

General Motors is piling some of its biggest percentage price in-creases on its smallest cars this autumn, as well as tacking some fat price tags on four newly introduced little models. GM, under pressure from the White House, announced last week that it was rolling back price increases on 1975-model cars an average of about $416, or 8.2 per cent. But it did not make detailed price lists available until vesterday. Those lists depict price increases ranging as high as 19 per cent. There are also some small cuts of $37, or 1 per cent, on a few models on which certain standard equipment was removed. The biggest percentage boost is on small cars which went up far more than the average 82 per cent. For example, GM's cheapest car, the subcompact Vega. climbed to $2,799, up $294, or 12 per cent, from the cost it carried Prices on slightly bigger compacts rose from about 12 to more than 14 per cent. The Pontiac Firebird Formula jumped $703 to $4,362, up more than 19 per cent.

A GM spokesman said that the price list was "in keeping" with the decrease announced last week. He explained that the 8.2 per cent figure was a sales-weighted average, based on the past experience of retail cars and trucks delivered and equipment ordered. He said the price list adheres strictly to the average increase announced last week.

Ford Cuts Production DETROIT, Aug. 27 (NYT) .-

Ford Motor, with a three-month supply of unsold Pintos, is cutting back production of the subcompact car but says it is still confident that the small-car segment of the market will account for about half of this year's sales. The No. 2 auto firm announced yesterday it will close the car assembly line at its plant at San Jose, Calif., for 10 days beginning Sept. 18, a move that will furlough 2,000 workers. When the plant reopens Sept.

30, the production line speed will be cut from 54 to 40 units an

Dow Average Drops 17 in Wall St. Rout

Price Setback Adds To 3-Week Decline

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (IHT).— The stock market fell back into a sharp decline today, continuing a slide that began nearly three weeks ago.

The Dow Jones industrial average dropped 16.59 to 671.54, and losers outstripped gainers by 5 to 2 on the New York Stock Ex-morning. Volume today totaled 12.97 million shares compared with 14.63 million yesterday,

Du Pont, one of the 30 Dow Jones industrial stocks, sank 7 7 8 points to 112 1/2. Analysts said there was no apparent news development to account for the decline, but noted that the issue had been recently under pressure following Du Pont's announce-ment Aug. 19 that it planned to adopt a new inventory accounting system that reduces inflation's effect on earnings and will cut profit to $5.10 a share from the previously reported $6.27 a share. Analysis also noted some negative comment this week on Du Pont's earnings outlook.

Marcor was one of the most active issues on the NYSE, diving 7 3/8 to 18 3/4, Mobil Oil said yesterday that its cash tender offer of $35 a share to acquire control of Marcor had expired and would not be extended. Mobil stock closed at 36 1/2, unchanged. The American Stock Exchange index closed down 1.01 to 70.61. Syntex was the most active issue, closing at 35 3/4, down 1 1/4, on volume of 72,500.

Also active were Giant Yellow-knife Mines at 10 3 8, down 5/8, Cook Industries 18 3 8, up 1 1/4, Robintech 50 3/8, down 1 3/8, and Houston Oil & Minerals 1/4. down The industrial average on the Vice-president Deishi Kato says gross soles for the current six months are likely to total 750 biltion yen, up 44 per cept. Exports will probably total 430,000 vehicles, up about 5 per cent, trut domestic sales are expected to fall about 14 per cent to 600,000 units. The fall in the total of vehicle sales, as well as higher material and wage costs, will be more or less covered by the 20 per cent increase in prices, Mr. Kato says. But a bigger tax burden and other factors will cause the 14 per cent decline in net profits.

25 well as name because he imagines he is extending a long line of ancestral continuity, a history of craftsmanship as a paradigm for integrity. He is a "maker," shaping with his hands what he considers to be palpable proofs of order. His perfectionism in his work is a form of prayer, an offering to an absolute standard that serves him as an organizing principle or religion. He is a "true believer," a superior example of the Zen-in-the-art-of-sandalmak ing movement that is sweeping America.

He is 29 and divorced, for he has discovered that of all materials, people are the most unstable. His guru-like teacher, Ottl has always told him that, in his craft, the metal always remains, cannot be destroyed. Mistakes can be corrected. But when his wife, Angela, betrays him, at the first beck of a third-rate poet, he feels that this sort of slip can never be salvaged, never be re-heated and shaped to his satisfaction.

Silversmith is content, mono maniacally absorbed in his work, for which he has a genuine talent, when he is struck by a car and suffers a broken arm. Here the reader has to swallow the sort of coincidence that we expect in Dickens, not in a contemporary novel: The driver of the car is that same poet, El-liot Hopper, who cuckolded Silver-smith eight years earlier. Somehow though, this is not disturbing. When an author gets you on his side, as Mr. Dintenfass does in "Figure 8." you allow him all sorts of liberties. his work, Silversmith restlessly seeks out the poet's daughter, Florrie, who was with him at the time of the accident. It was while he was giving swimming lessons to her, a charming 12-year-old, that her father and his wife held their assignations. When Silversmith becomes Florrie's lover, the figure 8 of the title is completed. An interwoven symmetry is established. Florrie is sophisticated, in the sense that she has lost more convictions than she has preserved Silversmith's innocence appeals to her nostalgia for herself. He corresponds to the wistful, not the rebellious side of her unhappy childhood She works as a researcher in animal behavior for a children's book publisher and Silversmith strikes her as an endearingly awkward animal Each is so alien to the other that they imagine they are in love.

Florrie's father is not happy about it. A fair exchange is a bad bargain. To make imings worse he is at a difficult stage in his life. His poet's persona, appears to be exhausted and he reduced to philandering and performing an intellectual striptease as poet in residence at an Restern college. He is forced into theatrics because the only thing poetic about him was his poetry and it has, temporarily or permanently, evaporated. "His life, having begun in earnest, seemed to be ending in farce."

Hopper is an interesting take, Born Holsman, he published his first poems under that aegis, but when his life veered from hamish. Holzman-like sincerities, he changed his name and his style to Hopper, acquired "a new voice, hard edged experience, free, his authenticity in order to mount

MICHAM Silversmith chooses the bandwagon of fashional to be a silversmith in fact modernity and now he finds him self a castaway on that ar island. In a second coincidence if you have one, you might : well have two-he finds Silve smith's former wife on the san campus and consoles himse with her. She is no longer ve attractive, but like other be poets, Hopper subsists on the sec ond-rate irony of such situs tions

Florrie, meanwhile, has alier ated Silversmith from his ph tonic garden of Eden. Work, orde and unmischievous hands are r longer enough for him. He fire his former life too dehumanize too ascetic. To work with living materials, already realized form like Florrie—this is his new pa: sion. His faith, however, is to much for her. In her permission world, faith is the one unforgiv shie pornography, a form a metaphysical rape. She defend herself against the possibility commitment by perceiving Silver smith as "pathetic," someon whose whole soul, not only h arm, is in a plaster cast. When he sees through Flori when he finds his former wif again in Hopper's arms, Silver smith discovers in himself a auger that he has been avoidin all his life. It is the missing in gredient that might have mad him a whole man. His ange brings about what the psycholo gist Rollo May has called "th ecstasy of violence," a "uniting of the self in action." In the last section of "Figur

8." Mr. Dinteniass shows Hoppe and Florrie, father and daughter "trying to pierce their common frony," the last convulsion of the generation gap. Silveramith find himself purged by his anger shaken from the long sleep o his passivity. But though "he ha lost his faith, he has kept hi categories." (I have forgotten the source of the quotation.) While he no longer believes in an "underlying scheme to reflect a work of order and hope," while he now sees "only fragments of shape." he finds another kind of support closer to the bone, to sustain him. "Okay," he tells himself "I'm made to dream; hopelessly. futilely, but still to theam." Improbable as it may seem,

Tirtue triumphs. "Pigure 8" is an original and persuasive demoi-stration of that battered old proposition: "You can't keep a good man down."

BRIDGE.

An unusual conventional bid ruffing twice in the dummy at contributed to the success of the North-South team on the disgramed deal from a Spingold Knockout Team Championship played in New York recently, North opened with four diamonds, which promised a powerful spade suit and a hand with slam potential. The normal fourspade opening would have been made if North had lacked the club ace.

East doubled four diamonds in an attempt to show strength in that suit, and South jumped to five hearts. This was meant to imply acceptance of spaces as a trump suit and strength in hearts. West doubled this and doubled again when North cue-bidhis club ace and North-South settled in six spades.

The opening lead was now crucial. If West had heeded his partner's double of four diamonds he would have led that suit. South would have lost the first trick, and would have had no way to avoid the loss of a club trick. However, West led the club king, and North-South had a top score instead of a bottom. The declarer won with the ace in dummy, drew trumps with the ace, and set about hearts. By using trumps as entries to h hand, he was able to estable the fifth heart and discusdummy's singleton diamond. A chib frick was surrenders and there was still a tromp the closed hand to ruff dumms last club. That gave South North-Robert Nail of Houst and Gerald Michaud of Wichit Kan -1,210 points and more the enough match points to win th life master-pairs title.

Only U.S. Fight Fans Scared by Ali's Talk

By Gerald Eskenazi
NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).—With the costlest title fight n history only one month away, promoters are becoming increasingly worried that Muhammad Ali may have scared away Americans from traveling to the bout in Zaire, the country once known as the Belgian Congo.

"This talk about the rumble in the jungle and voodoo dolls looking like George Foreman—why, it would scare me away," said Don King, the evangelical former convict who helped arrange the extravaganza.

All is scheduled to face Foreman, the heavyweight titleholder, at 3 a.m. (0300 GMT) on Sept. 25. A prime source of revenues for the promoters, who have exclusive world rights to the sale of tickets, was to be a package deal from New York. The only way to go to Zaire from here was through the

The promoters spoke of 5,000 Americans going to the fight, and more than 7,000 people in all visiting Kinshasa, the capital, where the fight will be staged.

King now says the price will be lowered for a second time. He said a person could get a round-trip deal, with fight tickets. for $1.500. This is almost $1,000 less than originally advertised. What about people who had bought the higher-priced tickets? "Well, we haven't sold any," King admits.

The only tickets sold in this country so far have been to the press, along with about 150 other tickets that included a

Over the weekend a travel agent held a two-day seminar, toping to sell people on going to Zaire. The agent, Scan Travel, rented a ballroom at the Hilton Hotel here.

A visitor to the ballroom at noon last Priday saw 120 empty seats, an empty chair at the front of the room and an unoccupied lectern. In fact, the whole room was empty except for neatly stacked travel folders and brochures describing prices for the fight and vaccination information.

A man at the door said no one had come in to ask about the fight and no officials were around.

But people were busy at Inter-Continental Hotels, the subsidiary of Pan American Airways that is providing food and other amenities for Zaire for the bout.

"We're figuring on six days, three meals a day for 6,000 copie," said James Potter, vice-president of operations and planning for Inter-Continental. He said he hadn't given the orders yet "because we're not sure who's going to pay us—the Zairian government or the promoters.

But on stand-by order in a warehouse in Perth Amboy, N.J. were some items Potter said would be available: 27,000 teabags, 100,000 packets of mustard, 36,000 cups of soup, including split pea; 300,000 packets of sugar; 50,000 coathangers, 15,000 rolls of toilet tissue; quiche lorraine, chicken Kley, Otnelets and lox.

King is the man who found a German lawyer who knew of a Swiss-based company that was interested in developing business in Zaire. The Swiss company has guaranteed each :fighter $5 million. Often lost in the controversy about the fight is a three-day music festival to be staged before the bout. King said such performers as James Brown, Aretha Franklin and Stevie Wonder were set to appear.

"Kinshasa is a city like any other big city," he said. "We're bringing in buses. We're bringing in food. We'll show every-one a black nation can run things perfectly. But we need white people. And white people may have been turned off because of what All says."

Courageous has a trim tab which serves as a sort of second rudder, and Southern Cross does not. The Courageous is thus able to make sharper turns and has more maneuverability. Chris and Jimmy Show Moves to the U.S. Open

It was only a few years ago, when Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert were in grade school, that the tennis tournament at Forest Hills was for amateurs only. It was called the Nationals and its officials racked their brains over how to attract customers.

Now the tournament is the United States Open, luring the world's best professionals with a record purse of $271,720. Tickets for the men's and women's finals are sold out, sales are running 50 - cent higher than last year, when a record was set, and Jimmy and Chris are not only both seeded No. 1 in singles, but also are planning to get married two months after the tournament.

John O'Hare, a Scottish international, can fill in quite adequately at center-forward or in midfield. But all the signs are that Clough, with some justice, considers this to be a transitional season for Leeds. The Evil of Work

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON-I read in the list in the war on inflation. They are 500 million marginal people Service in the margin, like service on the earth. These are people the world can't use. There is no economic need for them-no jobs, not enough natural resources, not enough arable land, not enough food, Socially and economically, they are useless, if not worse, since they cause political upheaval, high taxes and slums. It must be very dispiriting being one of the world's marginal people. Knowing that the blue-chip people wish you would just disappear cannot help selfcsteem.

Even at its best, as in the United States, where old people in the margin dine on pet foods and marginal mothers are tyrannized by welfare bureaucrats the sustenance offered by a robust state is poisoned by the bile of the benefactors. Uselessness and idleness stand high on the American tablets of cardinal sin.

More and more Americans will become marginal very soon now. if the economists are correct, These are the people who will have to move off the comployment list as inflation shakes down the economy Official economists are talking about unemployment going as high as 6 per cent before inflation begins to slow down, and pessimists are talking about 7 per cent

And afterward, what? Shall we go on, old style, abusing them as idlers, welfare bums, failures, shameful takers of government handouts, life's losers, people who have let the country down?

These traditional views rest on the notion that work is good and that people who work are, therefore, good, too, and ought not to be burdened with the support of people who don't work (bad).

Surely, however, this traditional view fails to recognize economic reality. If more people must go into the margin to halt inflation, then the people who go are doing great service to the state. The government should point out that these are people who have made great sacrifices to en-

papers recently that there should be honored, not reviled. in Vietnam a few years ago, may be an honor largely confined to the luckless, but we can at least refrain from treating it with

> We might go further toward a truly sensible policy. At present the ranks of marginal people are filled by a sort of draft policy: Nobody asks you if you want to become marginal, you are simply plucked out of your life's work one day and pressed into the margin,

Would it not be sound to follow the military's example by abolishing the draft and switching to a volunteer margin? Vigorous recruitment programs might persuade workers in secure jobs to leave them for service against inflation in the margin. All those who now complain about having work hard to support the idlers in the margin should be easy targets for recruitment, persuaded as they appear to be of the pleasures of idleness and the burdensome nature of work.

I am not naive about this. I realize that there is a serious obstacle to recruitment. This is the national faith in what President Nixon used to call "the work ctine," a conviction that working is ethical and not working isn't.

The covernment can change this with its propagands machinery. What, after all, is so ethical about work when the country is crying out for unemployment to save its economy from being inflated into an uneconomy?

If the country needs fewer workers, not more, it has every reason to preach the nobility of the nonwork ethic. Uncle Sam needs idlers. That should be its

Once we lured into the margin all the additional people necessary to save the dollar, what would we do with them? Give them a distinctive lapel button they could be proud of, I suppose, and some sort of unemployment compensation until the crisis passed, and when enough time had gone by, go back to wishing they would disappear, like all old

The Debate on the Equal Rights Amendment

By Linda Greenhouse

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).—Federal approval of the Equal Rights Amendment, only a few states shy of final ratification, is proving to be an clusive prize for its proponents.

At the same time that President Ford has given strong public endorsement to the amendment-designating yesterday, the 54th anniversary of women's suffrage, as Women's Equality Day-proponents of the Equal Rights Amendment are becoming concerned about a backlash on the local level, even in states that had been considered sale territory.

New York State, one of the first states to approve the federal amendment in 1972. when Congress voted to present it to the states for ratification, provides a good example of the shifting mood.

Rather than wait for full federal passage of the amendment nationally, women's rights advocates here pressed to pass a state amendment identical to the federal legislation, hoping that it would become law more quickly on the local level.

The state constitution requires that proposed amendments be passed twice, by separately elected legislatures. Although on its first round the amendment passed unanimously in the State Senate and got only two dissenting votes in the Assembly. knowledgeable women think it may have trouble even getting out of committee next

"If we can get it onto the floor, I'm not concerned," said Ross Graham, coordinator of the New York State Women's Political Caucus and an experienced Senate staff aide. "But my concern about getting it to the floor is very real."

There are several reasons for the sudden pessimism. Assemblywoman Constance Cook of Ithaca, who introduced the state amendment, is not seeking re-election this year. As a Republican, and an important committee chairman, Mrs. Cook was able to give the amendment an aura of majority party respectability.

Also, the lobbying against the amendment, very limited this year, will apparently be highly organized the second time around. Earlier this month, three anti-ERA women's groups joined forces to create Operation Wake-Up with the sole purpose of defeating the state amendment.

Rita Burke, president of the Women's Freedom Fund, one of the three organizations, said that Operation Wake-Up hopes to maintain an office in Albany during the legislative session.

The two other organizations involved in Operation Wake-Up are HOW, the state branch of a national group called Happiness of Womanhood, and WUNDER, based in Westchester County, which stands for Women United to Defend Existing

Opponents foar that the amendmentwhich would outlaw all forms of sex discrimination based on governmental action -would also deprive women of special privileges they now have. For instance, they fear that, if men and women were treated equally, women might somehow lose the option of staying home to raise children because they'd be forced to work like men. They are afraid, too, that alimony might be outlawed because men do

Women's rights advocates dismiss both objections. They contend that no woman would be forced to work-out if a woman chose to do so, the amendment could only benefit her. And rather than deprive a woman of alimony, they say laws could be written under the amendment to require support for dependent spouses regardless of sex, so that a man might be cligible for alimony if he was the one to stay home and take care of the children. As for objections that women might become subject to the draft, supporters say this is a moot point since the draft no longer exists for anyone. They also argue that on the question of rest rooms, prison wards and other public facilities now of privacy would take priority. The debate has caused concern among proponents, such as Ross Graham, who believe enough controversy will only serve to unleash the legislators' natural instinct to avoid controversy at all costs by keeping the amendment in committee.

segregated by sex, the constitutional right

New York was among the first wave of states to ratify the federal ERA-26 in the first nine months after final congressional passage on March 22, 1972. Since then, the momentum has altered drastically. Four state legislatures ratified the amendment in 1973 and three have done so this year for a total of 33 out of the required 38-three quarters of all the

All of the 1? remaining states have taken some negative action on the ERA, rejecting it either in committee or on the floor of one of the houses. Two other states. Nebraska and Tennessee, have rescinded their initial ratifications, but there is a legal dispute over whether those reversals are binding and it may well have to be settled in the courts.

The ERA has seven years from the date of congressional passage—or until March 23, 1979—to be ratified by the states or die. The more time that elapses, the more dif-ficult the job becomes, partly because the remaining states, many of them in the Deep South, are the seats of hard-core resistance and partly because the national opposition has more time to organize.

The National Organization for Women, which monitors the ERA's progress through its legislative office in Washington, has seen evidence of heavy spending by hig business interests, especially insurance companies, in anti-ERA campaigns. The ERA would make it unconstitutional to charge different insurance premiums to men and women if the difference was not supported by actuarial statistics.

Cathy Reeverts, a special consultant on the amendment for NOW, said the other day that ratification was possible in five states during the 1975 legislative sessions. The five are Illinois (where the ERA actually received a majority vote in June. but fell short of the three-fifths vote required by that state's constitution); North Dakota (where the ERA was ratified in the Senate last year but lost by three votes in the House); Florida (where the losing Senate margin in April was two votes), and Indiana and Louisiana, where the amendment has passed one house since

A state legislature that rejects the amendment can subsequently reverse itself, as the Connecticut House of Representatives did last year in approving the

NOW is working in coalition with the National Women's Political Caucus, the League of Women Voters, the Business and Professional Women's Association and Common Cause. The American Bar Association endorsed the amendment earlier this month. And on Thursday, President Ford urged its ratification.

PEOPLE: The Man Who Buzzed White House Tells W

The Army private who crashlanded a helicopter on the White House lawn last February said Monday that he did it because he was despondent over flunking out of flight school and because his sirlfriend did not turn up for a date, Pvt. Robert Preston. 20, pleaded guilty to taking the helicopter and breaching the peace when his court martial opened Monday in Fort Mead, Md. Before his forced landing on the White House lawn amid a hail of gunfire, Preston Juzzed several government buildings and circled the Washington Monument-all the time chased by a Maryland State Police helicopter. Preston was slightly wounded by gunfire as police wrestled him out of the pilot's seat. He faces a maximum of two and a half years of hard labor and forfeiture of all pay and allowances.
